Sprague

Names--Washington T

When the Northern Pacific was built across that portion of eastern Washington lying north of Snake river, the managers decided to erect car and repair shops at the little town of Sprague which had been permanently located and named in honor of Gen. J.W. Sprague, one of the names which stand prominent in the history of the construction of the road.

The gentlemen who selected the location did so because it was about the center of the division and therefore a very desirable point..

Sprague is the seat of justice of Lincoln county which was cut off from Spokane in 1884. It is the chief business and railroad point in the county and is the general shipping point though located near the southeastern extremity. With a population of fifteen hundred and a business reaching far out into the surrounding country...There are two weekly papers, the Journal and Sentinel, three hotels, two livery stables...etc.

Sprague was incorporated by the legislature in December, 1883
West Shore, 1887, 657-58 (with illustrations pps 671-673.)

There are several other towns in the county (Lincoln) such as Davenport, Harrington, Mondovi and Sherman . The former lies north of Sprague and has a population of about 300. It is a terminus of a branch line surveyed by the Sprague & Big Bend Railroad Co. and ~~it~~ was formerly the county seat ^{by} ~~of~~ selection of the legislature when Lincoln county was created. It has a number of good business houses and a good newspaper, the Times, published weekly. It is one of the rising agricultural towns of Eastern Washington.
