"The Home of the Great Big Baked Potato"

April 30, 1924

Judge Brooks
Goldendale, Wash.

Dear Judge:

Ever since our trip up to the three bridges on which we had such a pleasant time we have carried an immense burden as members of our Commercial Club. Usually there is one in the bunch that can make things disagreeable for all the rest. Our representative postmaster, J. A. White, has been mourning the loss of his horse-shoes. His laundry bill has been so great and the amount expended for new handkerchiefs has about broken the old man financially. We have suggested that he pour a little water on the waves but to no avail. As far as we can learn he has lost his horse-shoes or else they have lost him.

If you should be coming over the trail and run across these shoes we would appreciate it very much if you would pick them up. As a matter of fact, Judge, we have exhausted ourselves in trying to extend sympathy to the old man but have had no success. I think possibly, if you would drop us a line with a little sympathy in it in order that we might have it by our next luncheon day, May 7th, you might be doing the club and the old gentleman a little kindness. We realize that you have been over some of the hard places in life and know how to sympathize with the man who has lost his shoes.

Yours truly,
