

THE GANNON COLLECTION OF INDIAN MATERIAL

INVENTORY

FOREWORD

This collection was drawn together in the course of operations of THE MUSEUM SHOP and THE GANNON MUSEUM OF WAGONS, located in Mabton, Washington on the eastern boundary of the Yakima Indian Reservation.

It is outstanding in its presentation of select beadwork, corn husk weaving, basketry, and decorative horse gear from central Washington, Northern Idaho, and Northern Oregon, the region of the colorful and historically prominent Shahaptin (Nez Perce) and Chinookan linguistic families including such tribes as the Wishram, Nez Perce, Klickitat, Umatilla, Walla Walla, Warm Springs, and the Yakima.

Mainly the costumes and horse trappings were obtained directly from older Indians who had participated in the early rodeos and celebrations of the Toppenish, Bickleton, Lewiston and Pendleton communities. It is material typical of that used by Indians of the Northern Plateau in general from about 1870 to 1915.

Most of the necklaces and trade goods in the collection were handed down through generations of local Indian families and do not have the decayed aspect of similar excavated material.

With the passing of the older generation and the weakening of Indian ceremonial traditions, and also the changing of annual activity patterns, an unusual amount of costume material and woven artifacts from the turn of the century suddenly and briefly found its way into local trade channels during the period 1950 to 1965, when most of the Gannon Collection was assembled.

Now it would probably be impossible to duplicate the collection. The elder craftsmen are no longer able to produce, and even the raw materials are no longer available or are of an entirely different character.

Stone Age material in the collection has largely been obtained from local collectors who formerly scouted the banks of the Columbia River. With the establishment of a chain of dams along the course of that stream, the rich archaeological sources have been lost; so even the stone age relics, which were until recently so plentiful in this area, are now rarely available.
