Dear Friend Delmar:

Here are some more clippings. These are the second stories about your grandmother. It was possible to get it in soon, too. The other story was published just after I wrote you because we had a big paper that day.

Writing just for the newspapers makes it difficult to spend the time in research really necessary to do a proper job. I am not proud of the ones written, but perhaps it will help give your grandmother new things to think about.

Let me know when you get a chance how you thought they worked out. I will keep my eyes open and perhaps at some later time there can be something else, bringing in more old history.

Sincerely
