Nampa, Idaho-Nine miles north of Snake river and 20 miles from Boise City is the town of Nampa, a station on the Oregon Short Line. It lies on a great plain embracing about three hundred and seventy-five square miles or two hundred and forty thousand acres of good farming land.

Nearly all of this land is fertile soil, ready for the plow as soon as the sage brush is cleared off and irrigating ditches dug. One man can clear an acre in a day. It has been left unsettled because of the expense of bringing water upon it being too great for individual settlers.

Three months ago the Nampa Improvement company laid out the town of Nampa and began the construction of irrigating ditches consisting of a main canal from Boise river and a number of distributing ditches. When completed it will furnish a never failing supply of water sufficient to supply the entire tract which can be had by contract with the company at small costs. Logs and wood can be floated down Boise river through the canal to Nampa where they can be converted into lumber and good fuel.

Already forty thousand acres have been entered in the land office at Boise City and upwards of one hundred town lots have been sold by the company.
