Dear Mr. Knott:

On my recent pleasurable visit to your interesting enterprise, it occurred to me that, due to your obvious interest in history, you might like a copy of the recently issued Yakima Treaty Centennial booklet (64 pps.) which I am sending you with my compliments.

I was asked to write several sections and edit this by the Yakima Nation, and it marks the first time that the tribe has ever authorized a publication of that type. The book is being sent separately.

I am also enclosing a circular of my book, due to be published this spring, with the hope you may wish to order a few copies for the rare book store at your place. I made several purchases there and feel the material is something desirable in the book store because of the information it contains and because of the people from far and near who visit the place.

The books are returnable and are offered at 40 per cent discount to dealers.

In event you wish to place an order, it would be appreciated that you forward it direct to me, since I am personally attempting to line up a few far and near sales outlets. I will turn the order in to the publisher who would notify you a short time before publication. It will not be a large printing, but an advance order (without payment) would aid the publisher in determining the exact printing.

Dr. F.W. Hodge (Southwest Museum) wrote the introduction.

Sincerely Click Relander
