Lariat LOUNGE

The story behind

Lariat Lounge goes deeper than the atmosphere of redwood, flagstone and the carvings of Ed Quigley, the famous Western artist.

Here is the final frontier! Here legends of the Indians tell of the struggle between Wi-east (Mt. Hood), Pa-toe or Klickitat (Mt. Adams) for the love of beautiful Loo-wit (Mt. St. Helens) — the fiery combat of volcanic eruptions — and finally the destruction of the Bridge of the Gods, which now lies under the waters of the Columbia behind modern Bonneville Dam.

Here is the final frontier! Where the footsteps of Lewis and Clark became the Oregon Trail — widened and scarred by hardy pioneers looking for fabulous wealth of plentiful new lands. Here is the frontier of hardy woodsmen — of farmers and stockmen, of seamen when windjammers lined the banks of the Willamette. Here is the final frontier which now is turning to industry powered by the mighty Oregon (Columbia) which was formed and sculptured by the all-powerful Coyote — Indian spirit supreme.

Thus the present is linked up with the past — thus it is our wish that the traditional hospitality of the historic Old West be preserved as a memento to our heroic pioneers.

To this heritage is Lariat Lounge dedicated.
