PROWLING SEATTLE'S WATERFRONT

There is always something fascinating about prowling the waterfront of a port city. Seattle, gateway to Alaska and the Orient, is no exception.

Along pier-studded Elliot Bay, just a few steps from the downtown business district, you can spend hours or days watching ships loading or unloading cargo, visiting many interesting spots, or just absorbing the colorful atmosphere that is a part of waterfront activities.

In the space of just a few blocks you can dine at colorful waterfront restaurants specializing in seafoods, steaks or fine Polynesian foods, shop for unique Indian art and souvenirs in a world famous curiosity shop or a large import store featuring gifts from the Far East and around the world, watch sleek ferries plying Puget Sound from a new terminal, or view fireboats moored in readiness in a central area of the waterfront.

In the midst of this busy waterfront you will want to see the ocean's inhabitants alive; at the home of the world renowned killer whales where you'll see them in action along with seals, dolphins and other denizens of the sea.

To make your visit to Seattle's waterfront truly complete, be sure to take a tour of the harbor by boat. Excursions are a daily feature during the summer months and encompass not only a waterfront cruise, but a trip to Tillicum Village on Blake Island.

Riding a ferry boat is a must for most visitors to Washington. You can park your car at a waterfront parking lot and board a ferry for such points as Vashon Island, Bremerton or Winslow and spend the better part of a day cruising upon the blue waters of Puget Sound.

If you wish to stay on Downtown's waterfront a luxurious hotel built entirely over the water will be a most pleasant experience.

You can capture the romance of the sea in a tour of Seattle's waterfront and do it all within walking distance from your hotel room or the downtown business district.
