January 26, 1967

Seattle, Washington--Governor Daniel J. Evans has called attention to the importance of promoting good dental habits among children in a statement issued this week in support of the 19th national observance of Children's Dental Health Week."

"Tooth decay has long plagued human beings," he said. "This vulnerability is increasing in our modern civilization to a point where 98 per cent of all Americans are afflicted with tooth decay some time in their lives. Early preventive measures and education of children can aid in reducing greatly dental disease in adult generations to come," the Governor pointed out.

Children's Dental Health Week will be observed nationally from February 5 to 11. The slogan this year is "Smile."
