Dear Mr. Relander:

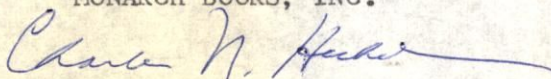

Your letter of November 14th, which was sent to our Main Office in Connecticut has just come down to the editorial office here in New York, which will explain the delay in replying to you.

Thank you for pointing out the typographical errors in JAILBAIT STREET. This sort of thing happens quite frequently despite every care that is taken by printers and by proof-readers, merely for the reason that the human element is involved and it just seems there are always one or two typos that get by in the final analysis.

With respect to your novel about college life, it sounds as if it might be something worthwhile for us to consider and I therefore suggest that you obtain the manuscript from the agent you mentioned and send it along to me to look at. I'll be glad to consider it without, of course, any obligation on our part. Meanwhile, thank you for thinking of us.

Sincerely yours,
