Dear Mrs. Hess:

Separately, and for your own use, I am sending you a Treaty Centennial booklet, 64 pps wraps, published under authorization of the Yakima Tribal Council. Since this was rushed through in some 12 days of writing and editing to get it to the printer in time, I'm not overly proud of it,

Caxton has not yet sent out circulars on Drummers and Dreamers of Priest Rapids so that sample can be sent to you, but it should be along any day now.

When it does come through, and you size it up and send in your request for company imprints, perhaps you would also consider placing an advance order or indication. This would help guide them in the number of books to issue, and anyway, there would be no money involved. But we'll let that work itself out.

I also know definitely now that the Quigley lithographs (based on the cover before the title is printed or overlaid and with wide margins) will be made available to me upon publication of the book. These are the lithos I referred to as of possible use as straight give aways at any book parties, 200 or 300 of them at each of the stores that would be kind enough to permit a book party and personal appearance of me and a couple of the picturesque Wanapums.

I think I sent you one of the clippings about the dam naming, but in case ~~not~~ not, here is one. Most sincerely
