Dear Click:

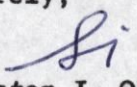

I appreciated getting your note. Ted Robertson sent me a tear sheet covering the very nice story on the opening of my law office here. I thought I recognized your ~~firm~~ ^{fine} Italian hand and I do thank you.

I have decided it is easier to get an office furnished and set up in Kabul than it is in Washington, D.C., but I have finally got it made and am beginning to settle down to a reasonably ordered existence without having to dodge painters, electricians and furniture movers. More important, I already have a modest retainer from one of the national banking organizations and have reasonable expectations of more business to come.

Virginia and I were most interest in your book on the Yakima Nation. We think the children would enjoy, as would we, having a copy of "Strangers On the Land". I am enclosing my check for $2.25 and would appreciate it if you would be good enough to have a copy mailed to us. And I am sure Karen and Eric would be much impressed if the author could be prevailed upon to autograph it.

Again, thanks for the note and the story. Whenever you should be back this way on either business or pleasure, be sure and call us. Meanwhile, Virginia joins me in warmest personal regards.

Sincerely,

Sylvester I. Olson
