Carol Trimble Heads Library

Miss Carol Trimble, librarian of the county library since its beginning in 1945, will take charge of Yakima's new regional library setup, it was announced last night by George M. Martin, chairman of the new board of directors.

Miss Trimble has agreed to accept the position as acting librarian and will take charge of putting into effect the merger of the city and county libraries, Martin said.

Directs All Operations

She will have charge of operations in both the city library building and the county library headquarters, will be in charge of all personnel and will make plans for such shifts in material or operations as may be advisable.

Martin said the new regional board feels fortunate in acquiring the services of Miss Trimble as head of the joint library.

"She has many ideas for the new setup," he said.

The merger becomes effective today.

Lived in Toppenish

Miss Trimble has lived in Toppenish most of her life, going to school there and still being a resident of that city. She went to Washington State college and continued her studies at the library school of the University of Denver, and later at the University of Washington.

Prior to becoming county librarian she was librarian at Yakima senior high school.

The county library board yesterday met to wind up business of the rural library and transfer books and other equipment to the new regional setup.
