Railroading In Pictures

Recognizing the matchless value of pictures in depicting how railroads carry out their job of transporting people and the nation's myriad products, the Association of American Railroads has worked with individual railroads across the country to establish a large central photograph collection for the use of writers, editors, publishers, layout men, commercial artists and television producers.

RAILROADING IN PICTURES describes this collection and is provided as a means of facilitating its use to illustrate stories and other materials concerning railroads.

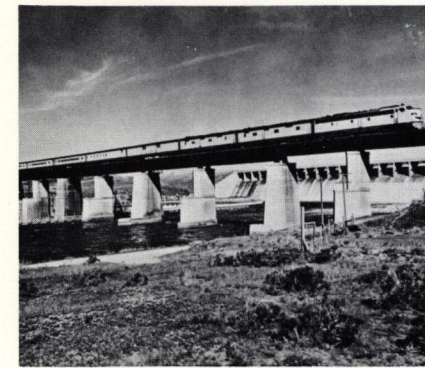

The selection of some 150 photos portrayed on the following pages is representative of a file of 15,000 glossy prints, all in 8 X 10-inch size, which is maintained by the AAR's Public Relations Department at the organization's Washington headquarters.

In this collection can be found the full range of scenes of modern railroading: freight and passenger trains, the latest locomotives and cars, track and structures along the way, electronic signaling and communications devices, push-button yards, shops, stations and terminals. Also available are pictures of railroad historical subjects, many of which date from the beginnings of the industry 135 years ago.

These photographs can be obtained free of charge for use only in publications and other mass media; they are not available for general distribution. If a particular print is desired, the number appearing under that picture should be indicated in your order. Credit lines appear on all photographs, and their use is appreciated whenever possible but not required.
