

KNOW THE TRUTH ABOUT INDIANS

Almost every school in the United States teaches an Indian Unit, somewhere in the elementary grades. Yet the published material about Indians is often either sentimentally unrealistic or brutally untrue. Indians were and are neither ignorant and bloodthirsty savages, nor misunderstood heroes. Indians are human beings like ourselves, living interesting normal lives in accordance with customs and beliefs which are prehistoric in origin—but greatly modified by several hundred years of contact with non-Indians. You and your children are entitled to know them as they are.

The publications of the Bureau of Indian Affairs present a true picture of the American Indian. They have been written by people who live and work with Indians. There are readers suitable for children in the elementary grades, and there are reference books which may be helpful in those grades, extremely useful in the high school, and of value to interested adults. New titles are being added constantly. Here is an annotated price list. Schools and libraries may receive a 25 percent discount from the list prices on all books listed (see discount table, page 3). Books sold by the Bureau may be replaced, if damaged or faulty upon receipt, but no refunds can be made.

INDIAN LIFE READERS

These readers were originally prepared to assist Indian children in learning to read and write their native language as well as to read English. The text of some books, therefore, appears in both English and a native tongue. This fact in no wise detracts from the utility of the books for use with non-Indian children. Some of the books are in English and Spanish.

The readers are copiously illustrated by Indian artists.

False Face from Iroquois Crafts

INDIAN HANDCRAFT BOOKS

The American Indians were not only great huntsmen, and courageous fighters, they were also artists of unusual manual dexterity, and remarkable sense of design. Much tribal art was ceremonial, given over to the propitiation of the supernatural forces which surrounded them. But there is no Indian tribe which has not taken the time to beautify every bowl, basket, or wooden cup, made for everyday use. After the coming of the white man, many of the more colorful of Indian arts were carried on with materials furnished by the whites—but in each instance these materials were transformed into something characteristically Indian. Books copiously illustrated. Suitable for older students and adults.

QUILL AND BEADWORK OF THE WESTERN SIOUX by

Carrie A. Lyford

IN STOCK

The use of porcupine quills on buckskin, later replaced by trade beads imported by white traders. Geometric designs by the women—realistic designs by the men.

One of the most beautiful and colorful arts of the Great Plains. Contains a portfolio of design plates. Paperbound: 50¢

SPRUCE ROOT BASKETRY OF THE ALASKA TLINGIT

by Frances Paul

The decorative designs used by the Indians of Southwest Alaska and the Pacific Northwest were the most original on the North American continent. Many of the crafts in which these designs were used are fast disappearing. A unique portfolio of Tlingit designs. Paperbound: 50¢

Camping in Canyon del Muerto from Here Come the Navajo!

INDIAN LIFE AND CUSTOMS BOOKS

A copiously illustrated series of books, telling of the life and customs of the Indian tribes, as they were when they made their first contact with the white men, and recounting some of the changes which have since taken place. Simply written by a noted anthropologist. Good reference material for junior and senior high school students, and for adults.

THE NORTHERN PAIUTE INDIANS by Ruth Underhill, Ph. D.

The story of the first inhabitants of the great basin of Eastern California and Nevada. The Indians who did the most with the least.

Paperbound: 60¢

THE INDIANS OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA by Ruth Underhill, Ph. D.

The Indians first encountered by Fra Junipero Serra in his march up the Pacific coast—often mistakenly described as the most primitive of American Indians.

Paperbound: 50¢

THE PAPAGO INDIANS OF ARIZONA, AND THEIR RELATIVES THE PIMA by Ruth Underhill, Ph. D.

Dwellers in the southern desert area, who never fought the whites—and who have always been self-supporting in the face of great adversities of nature.
