Dear Mr. Relander:

Many thanks for yours of 31 December. We've given every consideration to the two articles you suggest - ginko and elk - but do not feel that either would fit our editorial schedule at this time. I note that they may be prepared for other magazines - why don't you send me the clips when they appear? We could reconsider then, and there might be something to reprint, or something that suggested an article from a different angle at that time.

Thanks also for your offer of help on the Indian subject. We have nothing that I know of in the works at this time, but if we do go into this field, we shall certainly remember your special competence for editorial advice.

Nice to hear from you.

All the best,

Paul Palmer

Dear Mr. Relander:

Many thanks for your letter dated September 10.

As Miss Rogers is on vacation I am holding this for her return. You will be hearing from her some time after the 1st of October.

Sincerely,

Thelma Bell

Dear Mr. Relander:

Thank you for having sent me the booklets, Strangers On The Land. I have kept one but am returning the other as you will no doubt have need for it.

I wish I could be encouraging about doing something with the chapter on wild horses but the material just doesn't lend itself to the magazine. It is interesting as research and background material, and I have kept it here as possible source material if we should develop something along these lines, but I can see no way of handling it -- or suggesting the handling of it -- for a Digest piece at this time. I know we discussed this before and regrettably I can only come up with the same conclusions I did at that time.

I am not much more encouraging about the Indian angle. We have done so much about the Indians and have other articles in the works so there seems nothing to be done in this area right now. I am sorry.

It was good of you to let me see this material and I appreciate your keeping us in mind. I hope you will continue to do so.

Sincerely,

Mr. Click Relander
