Last week in recounting the experience of Hindoo John, the sheepherder, who came to town and quickly parted with his fortune of $125 (in the domicile of the fascinating but frail Annie Fairchild) The Herald reporter wrote that John was staggering under an "elephant jag."

The intelligent compositor put it in type "jug" and so it remained until half of the papers were printed, when the error was discovered and corrected.

Of course the scribe was furious and was planning a fearful death for the printer when the thought struck him that perhaps it was not such a frightful bull after all as most jags are derived from jugs. This , and this only, saved the typographer's life - Yakima Herald, February 4, 1892.

On Saturday last Editor Schnebley , of the Ellensburg Localizer, entered his seventh-fifty year of existence and 47th year of journalism.

He began his newspaper career in Pennsylvania and in 1850 took charge of the Oregon Spectator, the only paper published in the Northwest. At that time the Spectator's exchanges came around the horn in sailing vessels, arriving twice a year and the editor was never accused of plagiarism.

The Republic keeps track of Fort Simcoe news by grape-vine telegraph, via The Herald. It is good news, the only trouble with it being that it is a week or more old when it reaches the Republic's columns. Perhaps that paper believes that, like cheese, ~~one~~ and wine, it improves with age--Yakima Herald, February 11, 1892.

Newspapers

The Herald is in receipt this week of the largest and most complete line of new faces of job type to be found in any printing office in central Washington.

The invoice includes all of the novelties in types, as well as the best and most approved of standard faces, and carrying an immense stock of papers, it can conservatively be said that no office between Spokane and the cities of the Sound is equipped to compete with The Herald in job work--Yakima Herald, February 18, 1892.

Newspapers

The Blaine Journal has joined the silent majority.

Newspaper publishers find the business anything but a picnic these days, and it is only those papers which have merit that can successfully stem the tide--Yakima Herald, January 28, 1892.

Next Week Wednesday Lent begins and stops further festivities.

As the season of denial then begins, The Herald has concluded to deny this weekly visitor to some of its subscribers, who show no disposition to pay their delinquency.

Those who fail to receive The Herald hereafter will remember that the penitential period has arrived and that their accounts will be placed in the hands of an attorney--Yakima Herald, Feb. 25, 1892.

John Kelly, publisher of the Enumclaw Evergreen was in the city for several days during the past week looking over the field with a view of moving his plant and paper to Yakima City.

He says times are very hard over there; that property has depreciated greatly in market value in the last two years and that from present appearances, half of the population was moving to Yakima.

Mr. Kelly wasn't fully assured of the advisability of the newspaper venture but thought that if he could close out his interests he would come over anyway and engaged in some other line of business--
Yakima Herald, March 10, 1892.

Jules Verne predicts the invention of the "telephote" which will enable people thousands of miles apart to see each other.

Then Governor Ferry can say to Governor Flower of New York, "Here's looking at You." Yakima Herald, March 10, 1892.

J.R. Coe, whom many of our citizens will remember as having visited here last summer, has retired from The Yakima Herald of which he was part owner, on account of ill health.

He will take up his residence on his ranch near Marth Yakima and will cultivate fruits, vegetables, etc., for a change.

Mr. Coe was one of the founders of The Herald and the mechanical department of the paper has always been under his supervision.

Typographically The Herald is one of the neatest and most attractive weeklies in the Northwest and is always full of good readable news.

E.M. Reed, who has conducted the business and editorial end of the enterprise, now assumes full control--Yakima Herald, March 24, 1892, from Cle Elum Tribune.

Newspapers

The Yakima Republic appears to take great delight in publishing under a "scare head" and with comment designed to be unfavorable, a letter from some one in Walla Walla who had sent for copies of The Herald's illustrated edition and failed to receive them.

For the benefit of the Republic, which seems to be in very small business and decidedly hard up for news, the Herald will state that specien copies of this paper are always sent out whenever a request is made for them and that copies of the illustrated edition were promptly mailed to the gentleman at Walla Walla.

If he did not receive them we would advise the Republic to turn the criticizing attention to the republican administration of the postoffice department against which there is frequent cause for complaint. Yakima Herald, April 14, 1892.

Jay B. Edwards, whose erratic brilliancy made the Pasco Headlight so readable, has abandoned his effort to live on promises of rutabagas and cottonwood and has moved to Idaho and started the Alliance Worker--Yakima Herald, April 28, 1892.

The Pasco Headlight, after growing smaller and smaller until it was little larger than a cigarette paper, has finally given up the ghost.

Muncey left it, then Edwards and now the devil in a final kick in which he says he cannot live on wind and sand has turned the key on the office to await the coming of the first tramp printer--Yakima Herald, May 5, 1892.

The Overland Evergreen, published at Enunclaw, Wash. has been suspended. The editor says it has never been a paying venture.

It is understood that the plant will be removed to Yakima City,--Yakima Herald , May 12, 1892.

Newspapers

The Republic, while publishing the list of the city officers elected by the council, neglected to mention J.G. Boyle as city attorney.

The reason for this was that after the trouble between those good republicans, C.M. Holton and Boyle which culminated in a street fight, Mr. Holton gave instructions that his opponent's name should never appear in that paper--Yakima Herald, June 9, 1892.

Newspapers

The Slaughter Sun and the Anacortes Courier are two of the many newspapers that have fallen victims to the hard times and the general inconsiderateness of subscribers in arrears--
Yakima Herald, July 7, 1892.

New poster type just received at The Herald office. The Herald also carries the largest stock of job papers to be found in Central Washington. Taste and purse can both be satisfied--
Yakima Herald, July 14, 1892.

W.H. Bolce, city editor of the Spokane Spokesman and editor of the weekly Outburst, a society and dramatic journal, was arrested on Saturday last for criminal libel, based on an article which appeared in the latter paper charging County Prosecuting Attorney Allen with allowing Theodore Patchen, a horse thief, to escape from the law through the blandishments of Belle Patchen, the beautiful sister of Theodore who officiated as Allen's stenographer--
Yakima Herald, July 28, 1892.

The Rock Island Sun is the latest newspaper candidate for favor. It is published on the Columbia river at a new town, the name of which is embodied in the paper's caption, and is a very creditable production. Penrose & Adams are the publishers.--Yakima Herald August 25, 1892.

The Prosser land company has had an application from Zach F. Hickman, foreman of the Seattle telegraph, who is figuring on starting a newspaper at Prosser.

John T. Harsell, at one time a printer of this city paid a visit to the city on Saturday last. Harsell made a trip to the lower end of the county, probably with a view of establishing a paper should he be given sufficient financial encouragement.--Yakima Herald, September 8, 1892.

James R. Coe

It is with a marked degree of pleasure that The Herald feels called upon to offer its testimony in favor of the election of James R. Coe for county clerk.

For three years Mrs. Coe was associated in the publication of the Herald and the writer knows and appreciates his worth.

He is diligent and faithful in the performance of his duties, efficient in clerical work and courteous and obliging in his intercourse with his fellow men.

When he undertakes anything he throws into it his whole heart, and so it will be with the office of county clerk if he is fortunate in this election, for, by personal attention to the duties, the books and the records, will be kept in a manner that will win for him the commendation of those who are opposed to him in this contest as well as those who are heartily supporting him through a personal knowledge of his true merit.

James R. Coe is a deserving young man, and will make an excellent officer--Yakima Herald, November 3, 1892.

The presses of The Herald will soon be run by water power.

A motor has been purchased and will be set up as soon as connections can be made with the water mains. This will complete the equipment of The Herald and make it the proud possessor of the finest newspaper and job printing plant in central Washington--Herald, December 1, 1892.
