

Mr. Relander,

This information is needed for inclusion in a term paper due August 9, 1967. The class is studying Anglo-American Geography. This writer has been assigned "Land Uses On The Yakima Indian Reservation - Then and Now" as the subject for study and report.

An introductory chapter covering a cursory view of Indian History leading up to formation of the reservation has been written.

What is needed now is information; maps, tables of production, and other source materials that can be used as a basis of comparison in land use and production during the early days of the reservation settlement and that which exists today.

The tie-in that I am trying to use, between the paper subject and the study of Geography, is the utilization of irrigation on the reservation. The professors major interest field is Historical Geography, therefore I am attempting to give him a paper which combines History and some geographical change that man has brought to the land.

Mr. Ernest Loudon has been assisting me on the History side of this paper, and he suggested I turn to you for the needed information on geographical change.

Thank you in advance for your prompt attention to this request.

Don Farrell
