Dear Sir:

I am sending you a circular concerning Drummers and Dreamers, due for spring publication, because I believe it contains considerable material in which you would be interested.

Fort Simcoe (circular enclosed) is dealt with in three chapters in this book and as the circular will show, it was built by Gen. Robert Selden Garnett and one of the commanding officers there, its last year and one-half, was Gen. James J. Archer. These men and others stationed there, including many Marylanders, returned to join the Confederacy at the outbreak of the Civil War.

As a dealer you would be entitled to a 40 per cent discount.

Any advance order, and I am hopeful you see fit to place one at this time, should be returned to me. While I merely forward it to the publisher, it gives me a manner of sizing up advance reaction.

In my research concerning this book (five years) I have become so intrigued by the personal life and character, as well as the family, of Gen. James J. Archer (as you know there were two Gen. Archers) that I have hopes of doing something more extensive along that line some day. I have unearthed much material about him.

Most Sincerely

Cliff Relander
