Daily Mirror of Life in Yakima

By S. I. ANTHON

Characteristic of the guiding spirit of Miss Alle Miller, today retired after 26 years of serving as a rural mail carrier, a task in which she pioneered in this county, is her firm statement that she is by no means headed for an easy chair for the rest of her life. "There is lots of work to do in the world," she points out as she starts her new task as librarian of the Terrace Heights unit of the county library system. She will bring to that work the fidelity which has marked her as a carrier of the mail. To the people of a great unit of the Yakima valley she has been the bearer of tidings, good and bad, for many years. Always she has seen to it that the mail went through though often she has had to battle the elements. She began her work in the days when an automobile was a strange contraption to many of the people to whom she brought mail along dirt roads; she has lived to see the auto regarded as almost a necessary tool for living. Despite the great changes she has seen, she has remained unmoved as a rock in her decision to serve as well as humanly possible. That's a great feat and worthy of special recognition.
